

Thirteen years have passed since the beginning of the Richmond Birdwing Conservation Project. The project is considered a flagship project for community participation in a conservation project.

Due to the dedication of community members, many natural lowland habitats of O. richmondia are now protected and managed in a way that will ensure O. richmondia is no longer at risk of extinction.

This booklet summarises the conservation efforts for the Richmond Birdwing and also contains examples of other international birdwing conservation projects.

